Dear Friends,

For many, January is a time for reflection on the past year. Rather than dwell on the tumultuous events of 2020, however, I am inspired to celebrate a bright future made possible by the unwavering determination of this institution and its people to overcome the unprecedented challenges we have faced. There is no doubt in my mind that the groundwork we have laid out over this past year will pave the way to a more equitable and inclusive Museum than ever before.

Exactly 100 years after women gained the right to vote, the 2020/20+ Women @ NBMAA initiative presented six standout exhibitions in 2020 featuring groundbreaking, visionary artists, the majority of whom have never been shown at the NBMAA. Although 2020 has ended, the initiative continues with two more vibrant exhibitions. Opening this February, Helen Frankenthaler: Late Works, 1990–2003 will be the first museum presentation dedicated to the late works of Helen Frankenthaler, one of the most influential artists of the 20th century. In May, we open the forthcoming NEW/NOW exhibition, Jennifer Wen Ma: An Inward Sea, an immersive installation that will reflect upon the events of the last year through the stories of New Britain residents.

As part of our commitment to supporting women artists of diverse backgrounds, and thanks to the generosity of donors to our acquisitions endowment, the NBMAA is thrilled to announce recent acquisitions by acclaimed artists Anni Albers, Shantell Martin, Faith Ringgold, Betye Saar, Carrie Mae Weems, and others, that we look forward to bringing to our galleries for the benefit and enjoyment of generations to come.

Beyond the incredible shows we were able to bring to our gallery walls in 2020, perhaps even more significant was the impact of our Museum on the community as a whole. It is no coincidence that in the year of 2020/20+ Women @ NBMAA we were able to forge some of our strongest and most diverse community partnerships thus far. Most recently, we dedicated not just one day, but an entire week of programming and activities celebrating the life and legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

I would be remiss not to mention our incredible team here, who truly represent all that we stand for as an institution. It is only through their tireless hard work and dedication that what started as a vision for 2020 came together in such a tangible, successful reality. I look forward to yet another year with the NBMAA as we continue reflect and amplify all perspectives, through American art and through all we do.

I wish you all the happiest and healthiest New Year,

Min Jung Kim
Director & CEO

EXHIBITION SUPPORT

2020/20+ Women @ NBMAA is presented by Stanley Black & Decker. Additional support is provided by Bank of America.

Helen Frankenthaler: Late Works, 1990–2003 and NEW/NOW: Jennifer Wen Ma are part of 2020/20+ Women @ NBMAA presented by Stanley Black and Decker with additional support provided by Bank of America.

Helen Frankenthaler is made possible by the generosity of the Special Exhibition Fund donors, including John N. Howard, Sylvia Bonney, and The Aeroflex Foundation. We also gratefully acknowledge the funding of Carolyn and Elliot Joseph.

Helen Frankenthaler is also made possible by The Chase Family Foundations and the Bailey Fund for Special Exhibitions.

In-kind support has been provided by the Helen Frankenthaler Foundation.

NEW/NOW: Jennifer Wen Ma is made possible by the support of The Benzhor Group and the Howard Fromson Endowment for Emerging Artists.

Our thanks to NBMAA supporters
The New Britain Museum of American Art is proud to present 2020/20+ Women @ NBMAA, a groundbreaking, year-long series of exhibitions and programming featuring works by a diverse group of women artists. The exhibitions, which honor the centenary of women’s suffrage in America, provide a twelve-month platform for women artists in the context of this milestone year.

The artists selected represent diversity in race, ethnicity, age, experience, perspectives, cultural backgrounds, career, geography, and medium. Kara Walker, for example, explores race, gender, violence, and identity in representations of the African American experience. Anni Albers is considered the most important textile artist of the 20th century, as well as an influential designer, printmaker, and educator. Shantell Martin’s work is unique in her innovative and multidisciplinary output—combining art, commerce, and technology, while Jennifer Wen Ma’s interdisciplinary practice bridges installation, public art, performance, and community engagement. Helen Frankenthaler has long been recognized as one of the great American artists of the 20th century.

The Museum will also present two group thematic exhibitions as part of the 2020 year-long program. One exhibition features rare Shaker “Gift” or “Spirit” drawings created by women between 1843–57. “Gift” or “Spirit” drawings are unique to the Shakers and to American religious culture. The other, which honors 100 years of American suffrage, highlights artists whose work advocates for social change, installed with historic ephemera from the women’s suffrage movement. Individually and collectively, the works by these artists challenge and inspire women and people of all genders, races, and ethnicities.

EXHIBITION

In the winter of 1969, the photojournalist Ernst Haas arrived at Helen Frankenthaler’s New York studio with a 35mm Leica and multiple rolls of black and white film. There to document the artist painting a picture, he followed her around her spacious loft at East Eighty-Third Street and Third Avenue, capturing a day in the life of a high profile artist still on the rise. Some of the more candid images of Frankenthaler mixing paints and talking on the phone appear as interstitial grace notes before and after the creative act. The most revealing are shot up close, from down low. These are decidedly filmic, frame to frame, action to action. Frankenthaler obviously felt at ease with Haas as she stepped in her stocking feet onto an expansive, rolled-out bolt of cotton duck, bent over to pour a generous amount of acrylic paint across its unprimed surface, then knelt down with outstretched arms to manipulate the pigment using an array of brushes and sponges. Haas’s stop-action sequence makes a rigorous process look effortless.

Awed early on by the unfettered freedom of Abstract Expressionist painters, Frankenthaler gravitated to daredevil brinksmanship when it came to how paintings got made. Having seen Jackson Pollock’s galactic canvases firsthand on the pristine white walls of Betty Parsons’s midtown gallery and visited his rustic studio barn in The Springs on Long Island during the early 1950s, the fledgling bohemian embraced painting as a full-bodied proposition, a vehicle for self-expression through the spontaneous invention of form—a liberating process adapted at the same historical moment by like-minded poets, musicians, and dancers. From the time she returned from an extended road trip with her romantic partner, the critic Clement Greenberg, through New England and Nova Scotia during the summer of 1952, and that fall composed Mountains and Sea in her West Twenty-Third Street studio, she realized what jazz musicians intuitively understood: that every creative gesture embodies who you are and what you’ve learned up until that point, and that making a painting, like improvising music, thrives on relational circumstances playing out in real time.

Seeing the process of painting as perpetually in flux enabled Frankenthaler to see the medium of painting as perennially relevant—a mounting challenge as the 1960s rolled into the 1970s and 1980s and a critical mass declared modernism moribund. At times dispirited, she nevertheless continued to defend painting’s viability: to younger artists in seminar settings, and, undaunted by others’ skepticism, in the sanctity of her own studio, as she rose to the occasion time and time again even after the act of tackling monumental canvases on hands and knees was no longer possible. Painting was essential to her well-being—an act of necessity. Like an aging dancer who invents new ways to move through space, the painter accepted her physical limitations and pressed onward.

There’s every reason to be philosophical about growing old. Simone de Beauvoir clearly understood the realism of aging as she crossed the mid-life threshold and wrote The Coming of Age. “Like all human situations,” she proposes in the book’s preface, “[old age] has an existential dimension—it changes the individual’s relationship with time and therefore his relationship with the world and with his own history.” How does creativity accommodate age? How does one’s place in the cycle of life affect what one does and how one does it? How does aging influence one’s aesthetic disposition? The dynamics of creativity and aging are as much a philosophical conundrum as they are an aesthetic revelation.

Frankenthaler had always painted on paper, a practice that only increased in the 1990s, when she was in her sixties. This preference was influenced by many factors. Paper’s enhanced ability to absorb and bleed appealed to the painter. So did its expansive proportions. Paper provided an alternative to canvas that, depending on the size of the sheet, was easier to manipulate and, if need be, to throw away. “I think I’ve been on a recent run of paper work (some of it very large) for a number of reasons,” the artist told Bonnie Clearwater. “One is that having worked on canvas on such a huge scale for almost half a century I felt I had somewhat exhausted that woof and weave.” The transition to larger sheets of paper, some handmade, that could be laid out by her assistant across the floor or on tabletops elevated on sawhorses for easier accessibility, was seamless.

Protean artists are notorious recyclers when it comes to recapitulating earlier ideas with a renewed sense of urgency. “Painting is a constant process of renewal and discovery,” Frankenthaler told curator Julia Brown. The continuity between the late work (post-1990) and what came before, in content and execution, is striking: compositions that vary from dense and somber (Santa Fe III, 1990; Lighthouse Series V, 1998; Almost Dark, 2002) to airy and buoyant (Beginnings, 1994; Acrobat and Aerie, both 1995); favored figures and gestures re-envisioned (Untitled, 1991; Solar Imp, 1995); and the curious commingling of amorphic and geometric configurations (Cassis, 1995;Untitled, 1996) continue to distinguish the painter’s poetic abstractions.

Frankenthaler’s late in life arsenal included many of the same materials and tools she had always used: acrylic paint thinned out and applied with various brushes, sponges, and an array of hardware and utensils (windshield wipers, basters, and scrapers), complemented on occasion by charcoal, crayon, pastel, pencil, and ink. Graced with memorable encounters, a vast art historical image bank, and technical prowess, the aging artist moved in whatever direction suited her mood and imagination. Some of the most poignant works, conceived as a minimal horizon of pastel strokes (Untitled, 2003), or as trails dissipating into silent space (Southern Exposure, 2002), feel like veils of fleeting time.

“Over time, we’re left with the best” is how the artist summed up her lifelong rapport with a creative process unencumbered by rules. Painting had always been inseparable from a life fully lived. To peruse Frankenthaler’s datebooks from the 1990s and early 2000s is to realize how active she continued to be. By all accounts, her daily regimen remained rigorous, her stamina astonishing. When she wasn’t in her studio painting or at Kenneth Tyler’s workshop making prints, she was out looking at art, socializing with friends, exploring real estate, teaching and traveling, planning retrospectives of her works on paper and woodcuts, and participating in numerous other shows at galleries and museums. To say she was active would be an understatement. She also made several trips to Santa Fe, New Mexico, as a visiting artist; married Stephen M. DuBrul in June 1994; after thirty-three years with the André Emmerich Gallery transitioned to Knoedler & Company; moved (after twenty-two years) out of her 117 1/2 East Eighty-Third Street studio; built a new studio at 102 Saddle Rock Road in Shippan Point, Stamford, Connecticut, then, after marrying DuBrul, undertook the construction of a new studio and the renovation of a home at 19 Contentment Island Road in Darien, Connecticut; moved out of the townhouse at 173 East Ninety-Fourth Street after four decades; and in the final run acquired a two-bedroom apartment in New York. This constant juggling of multiple projects, all the while collaborating on prints with Universal Limited Art Editions, Pace Editions, and Brand X Editions, sustained her until her final days.

“ColorFields”
In partnership with the Judy Dworin Performance Project and the Helen Frankenthaler Foundation, the NBMAA will present ColorFields, inspired by the late work of Helen Frankenthaler.

Currently a work in progress, ColorFields embodies JDPP’s signature artistry, interpreting visual image and spoken word through the vocabulary of dance and movement. ColorFields is an exploration into Helen Frankenthaler’s work and process to bring her inspirations and creative choices to life for audiences to ponder. Visit us at nbmaa.org/colorfields.
NEW/NOW: JENNIFER WEN MA

May 6–September 26, 2021
William L. and Bette Batchelor Gallery

As part of the NBMAA’s NEW/NOW exhibition series featuring emerging and established contemporary artists, the Museum will present Jennifer Wen Ma: An Inward Sea, opening May 6. In recent years, Ma (b. 1973, Beijing) has explored themes of utopia, dystopia, and the human condition in immersive and participatory installations. An Inward Sea continues this exploration, while reflecting deeply on the events of the last year—including the COVID-19 pandemic, extensive shut downs, and subsequent racial justice uprising in the U.S.—and how they have impacted the lives of residents of New Britain and beyond.

The exhibition comprises an installation invoking a moon hovering above a vast sea. In this case, the “sea” is made from black cut-paper waves tipped in gold, that span much of the gallery floor. The waves are reminiscent of traditional Chinese landscape painting and serve as metaphors for the difficult terrain we are navigating through. Above the waves, two pendulums swing freely over the sea. Their kinetic motions create a release and tension that invigorate the physical gallery space and psychological landscape in the mind of the viewer. A projected moon reigns over the glistening seascape, featuring profiles of New Britain residents, accompanied by audio recordings of their individual stories of isolation and otherness, community and togetherness, and other experiences of the pandemic and beyond. The moon sets a poetic stage upon which the narratives of everyday individuals can unfold in response to the momentous events of our time and broad concerns about the human condition.

Jennifer Wen Ma is a multidisciplinary artist whose practice includes installation, painting, drawing, video, public art, design, performance, and theater. She frequently creates site-specific works that respond to the institutional or community contexts in which they are viewed. She has exhibited worldwide with international institutions, including Guggenheim Bilbao, The Metropolitan Museum of Art, Lincoln Center Festival, Ullens Center For Contemporary Art, Beijing, among others.
Esphyr Slobodkina
Abstraction with Red Circle

Award-winning artist, author, and illustrator Esphyr Slobodkina (1908–2002) is perhaps best known for her children’s books, including her most famous, Caps for Sale, alongside 24 other notable titles. Nevertheless, with a rich and varied career spanning 70 years and encompassing a diverse body of work, Slobodkina’s impact on the world of abstract art cannot be understated.

Born in Siberia in 1908, Slobodkina was raised in a family which encouraged her to appreciate and pursue her artistic talent. However, due to the Russian Revolution, she spent most of her early life moving from place to place, studying in Manchuria, China before eventually immigrating alone to the United States in the late 1920s. There, she enrolled in the National Academy of Design. Feeling constrained by the academy, Slobodkina became one of the founding members of the American Abstract Artists group in the 1930s, for which she had served as the organization’s president, secretary, treasure, and bibliographer. The group served as support for abstract artists in a time where this newly emerging style was often overlooked.

Like many other Russian modernists, Slobodkina was inspired by the traditional crafts of her home country, incorporating stylized forms and rich colors into her work. However, as her style progressed, she would incorporate her other passions of architecture and mechanics into her work, creating assemblages of wood, wire, and everyday objects. Throughout her career, she also created murals and designed clothes, jewelry, and even buildings.

In 1938, Slobodkina painted Abstraction with Red Circle, pictured. Here, Slobodkina’s use of carefully placed diagonal lines, overlapping shapes, and contrasting colors creates the illusion of space. This, coupled with the neutral background, gives a sense of movement, as if the shapes are floating in the space.
ACQUISITIONS AND GIFTS

2020/20+ Women @ NBMAA: Acquisitions and Gifts

2020 marked the 112th anniversary of the New Britain Museum of American Art’s first art acquisitions. While the Museum traces its roots to the New Britain Institute and Library Association, which was formed in 1853, it wasn’t until 1908 that our fledgling institution was able to make its first art acquisitions, thanks to a transformative gift of $20,000 in gold bonds given in 1903 by former New Britain mayor John Butler Talcott. From 1908 to 1937, 23 paintings by American artists were purchased from the Talcott fund. Since then, the permanent collection has grown to nearly 8,900 artworks, through generous gifts to the Museum, as well as through the donation of acquisition endowments like Talcott’s, which are intended solely for the purchase of artwork.

This past year, the 2020/20+ Women @ NBMAA initiative celebrated the invaluable contributions of women to the arts, while also bringing attention to their disproportionally low representation in art museums nationwide: on average, women artists represent only 27% of solo exhibitions and roughly 13% of permanent collections. As part of the NBMAA’s commitment to increasing representation of women artists, the 2020/20+ Women @ NBMAA initiative has encompassed special exhibitions and permanent collection gallery reinstallations dedicated to female-identifying artists, while also focusing on acquisitions of work by women artists from diverse historical periods and cultural backgrounds.

Over the past year, and in the context of our 2020 initiative, the NBMAA is thrilled to announce the purchase of 18 iconic works by 12 widely celebrated women artists, made possible through the application of NBMAA acquisition funds. Through these acquisitions, which include work by artists Betye Saar, Faith Ringgold, Elizabeth Catlett, Anni Albers, Ana Mendieta, among others, the NBMAA has doubled the number of Black and African American women artists, increased the number of Asian American women artists, and tripled the number of Latin American women artists in our permanent collection. Additionally, several important works by women artists were gifted to the Museum this year. These remarkable works by lauded artists enhance the NBMAA’s collection immeasurably, and bring greater diversity to our galleries, for the benefit and enjoyment of visitors for generations to come.

SUSAN RATHGEBER

My engagement with the New Britain Museum began in the late 1980s, volunteering in the dank basement of the Landers house. The Museum was a far, far different place, and it was clear then that major changes were needed. In the 30 short years since, it has become among the great small museums in the United States. Critical decisions at opportune times have enabled it to grow and evolve.

I’ve made many friends during these years, sharing all the Museum has to offer by enjoying social and educational events and working together to support it. My involvement to date has been primarily with development, encouraging donations from our Members who are the Museum’s lifeblood. I know that love of the Museum runs deep and personal and financial support are key to its future.

NANCY STUART

Nancy Stuart has served as dean of the Hartford Art School (HAS) at the University of Hartford since 2012 where she works closely with the faculty and staff on strategic planning, program development, student recruitment, and fund raising.

Prior to her work at the HAS she served as the Executive Vice President and Provost of the Cleveland Institute of Art; taught photography at Lansing Community College; and served as Associate Director of the School of Photographic Arts and Sciences at Rochester Institute of Technology (RIT).

Nancy earned her BA from Michigan State University, a MS from RIT and a PhD from SUNY Buffalo Graduate School of Education. Her photographic work is in the collection of The George Eastman House International Museum of Photography and she has had numerous solo and group exhibitions during her career.

What is your first or favorite memory of the NBMAA?

My husband Peter and I were introduced to the NBMAA when we were newlyweds almost 39 years ago. We visited the Audubon Exhibit and fell in love with the charm of the Museum. We have both volunteered in different capacities and are inspired to support this wonderful museum over the years. To see the artistic growth and expansion of the Museum and its importance and place in the art world now is thrilling.

Besides visiting museums, what else do you like to do in your spare time?

We visit museums when we are traveling and see exhibits and special works of art we would otherwise not be able to enjoy. We also love to take in the history and architecture of an area we are visiting and if there is an opera available, that is a really special treat!
How long have you been at NBMAA and what is your role here?

As of February 2021, I will have worked here 3 years as the Marketing Department’s Graphic Designer. I’m responsible for a lot of visual and physical marketing materials, like designing the brochures, the quarterly newsletters (you’re reading one right now!), exhibition invites, as well as assets some people might not be aware of, such as the digital slides on our lobby television, and the title vinyls for every exhibition. My goal is to maintain a cohesive brand style that’s currently associated with the Museum, but have fun with it where I can.

You are a professional graphic artist working for an art museum. Tell us about your process and from where do you draw inspiration both personally and professionally?

Being a professional graphic artist, or any artist, requires you to steal like an artist. I have a lot of Pinterest boards and a lot of physical materials like booklets, brochures, and invites from other museums. I’m constantly flipping through them looking for new ways to adjust layouts or place images together or set up typography. It’s just a lot of looking, compiling, and the pulling what speaks to me and what I think will work for the Museum.

What do you love most about NBMAA and how do you feel you are helping to fulfill its mission?

What I love the most is how dedicated my colleagues are about bringing the museum experience to our visitors, from lectures, to gallery talks, to live music events and parties. 2020 was especially hard considering the pandemic restrictions, but it gave me the opportunity to work with people in ways I haven’t before to make our content more accessible for everyone. Hearing that gallery talks are being attended by hundreds of people, some who aren’t even in this country, makes me so happy, and I get to extend that accessibility by helping create a variety of digital content that can be accessed by people who don’t even have to step into our Museum.

What is your favorite work in the collection and why?

My absolute favorite painting is Thetis Bringing Armor to Achilles, by Benjamin West. I have a lot of thoughts and feelings about the myth of Achilles and his representation in the Iliad and his relationship with Patroclus; those don’t have much to do with specifically why this painting is my favorite, but it’s a pretty big factor. My favorite thing is Achilles’ absolute look of teen-like despondency. No, mother, I will not wear your armor and I will not fight in the war, can’t you see I’ve fallen into an inconsolable depression? No one understands me.

NBMAA Equity Statement

Recognizing the racial tensions that exist in our country today, the NBMAA is compelled to confront the bias and inequity that has long existed in our own community, culture, and institution. The NBMAA is committed to fulfilling its mission to tell the “unfolding story of America through its art and history” by including narratives of underrepresented cultures, viewpoints, and artists in our permanent collection, acquisitions, exhibitions, and educational programming. Through critical review of our board, leadership, staffing and volunteer opportunities, we will strive to be a better reflection of the community we serve.
