As we emerge from late winter’s unpredictable weather, we begin to prepare for spring and summer celebrations like graduations, weddings, vacation travel, and family parties with greater confidence. The approaching season of gathering has me thinking about treasured moments created when families come together right here in the Museum. I can’t wait to share with you all that we have planned in the coming months to help facilitate multi-generational magic.

This spring, the NBMAA is delighted to present Walter Wick: Hidden Wonders! The largest survey of Walter Wick’s work to date, this exhibition is designed to be shared by all ages. From grandparents who read Walter Wick’s I Spy series with their (now grown) children, and parents who first encountered Walter Wick as kids, to their young children and grandchildren who are reading Wick’s books for the very first time, all ages are primed to enjoy this show. In addition, the family-friendly content of Hidden Wonders allowed us to design extensive programming, including school vacation activities for families, academic talks for adults, Members-only perks, and many opportunities to meet Walter Wick and have a book signed.

We look forward to witnessing another coming-together at our annual Juneteenth Community Day on Saturday, June 17. This year’s festivities will sit alongside historic Walnut Hill Park, seamlessly uniting community space with Museum grounds. I invite you to enjoy our newsletter highlight on Adrian Elliott, a vital member of our Community Advisory Committee who is returning as the host for this year’s Juneteenth performances. Thank you to Adrian and everyone else who helps make this meaningful event possible.

We are also approaching the time of year when we gather together to thank our most loyal supporters. The Heritage Society Champaign Brunch on April 29 gives us a chance to recognize those individuals who have included the NBMAA in their estate plans, and the John Butler Talcott Society Annual Black-Tie Director’s Dinner celebrates the generosity of JBTS Members on June 3. I invite you to mark your calendars and join us for these joyful occasions.

I encourage you to read a thoughtful letter from the Bruemmer family of the JP Bruemmer Charitable Lead Trust to the NBMAA on page 13 of this Newsletter. We are so grateful to Jay Bruemmer for his legacy of giving and his love for this Museum, and to his family for their tireless work to fulfill his vision of support.

I am proud to lead a Museum that builds bridges to connect community and family members through the sharing of art. Thank you all for your continued support of this mission.

The whimsical world of Walter Wick has fascinated people of all ages since 1991, when his first children’s book series I SPY found its way onto the bookshelves of millions of American households. The success of Wick’s books has established him as one of the most celebrated photographic illustrators of all time. A Hartford native, Wick began his artistic career as a landscape photographer before becoming enamored with the technical aspects of studio photography. Wick aspired to master studio techniques, but also to represent such concepts as the perception of space and time in photographs, and experimented with mirrors, time exposures, photo composites, and other tricks to do so. This manipulation of processes and perception has led to a prolific career that has now, over 30 years after the release of I SPY: A Book of Picture Riddles, resulted in the publication of more than 26 children’s books.

In the past 16 years, the New Britain Museum of American Art has celebrated Wick’s delightful imagery in several installations, including the highly acclaimed 2006 exhibition Walter Wick: Games, Gizmos, and Toys in the Attic, which traveled to 15 additional museums across the United States. In 2015, through the generosity of Walter Wick and Linda Cheverton Wick, the NBMAA was gifted a collection of 84 of Wick’s masterful photographs. The appeal of Wick’s photographs, books, and installations has continued to draw admirers of all ages, from across Connecticut and around the world.

In March of 2023, the NBMAA launched the largest survey of Wick’s work to date. Titled after his recent book, Walter Wick: Hidden Wonders! will span 50 years of innovation, wonder, and imagination. Tracing the span of Wick’s career, the exhibition is organized by themes that have long fascinated Wick, including Miniature Worlds; Floor Games; Craft-Built Worlds;
Optical Illusions; I Spy Games; Puzzle Challenges, Wonders of Science; Connecticut Woods; and Curiosity Shop. The exhibition pairs beloved images, including over 15 never-before-seen works, with numerous three-dimensional models upon which his photographs are based. Celebrating five decades of creativity, as well as Wick's indelible role in the development of photographic illustration, this exhibition is a must-see for art lovers of any age.

This is the first of a planned series of exhibitions designed to highlight examples of the finest Shaker craftsmanship from the past 175 years. Each exhibition will focus on objects from a single or pair of Shaker communities or from loans from particular collections. In most instances, collaborations between the New Britain Museum of American Art and individual collectors or institutions will be the rule. This is the case with Masterworks of Shaker Design: A Tale of Two Enfields.

In August 1774, a small band of eight “Shaking Quakers” arrived in New York from England. They were led by a charismatic woman named Ann Lee. That was an inauspicious start for a sect that would eventually have an influence far disproportionate to its tiny size. Once their Testimony was opened to the World in May 1780, hundreds were attracted to “The United Society of Believers in Christ’s First and Second Appearing,” and the Believers quickly spread from New York State into New England. In 1787, their first fully formed community was gathered into Gospel Order at New Lebanon, New York. Over the next several decades, seventeen more long-lasting Shaker villages were established, extending from Maine to Kentucky. Two of these communities happened to be close to towns sharing the same name: Enfield, Connecticut (1792-1917) and Enfield, New Hampshire (1793-1923). By the mid-1800s, their numbers had swelled to well over 4,000 members in eighteen communities.

There are certain characteristics of Shaker craftsmanship that were common to objects made at each of their communities: meticulous fabrication techniques; use of the finest available materials; a paring down of forms that were omnipresent in the non-Shaker World (often referred to as simplification); and the priority given to utility or function. What is still unclear after many years of diligent scholarship—searching through voluminous records that recorded even the smallest details of their daily life—is why furniture from widely separated Shaker villages has the look. That is, why do they have the distinctive appearance that distinguishes them from objects in the world around them? This certainly seems to be part of their present-day appeal—"the Shaker look"!

Most of the objects displayed here have also survived in exceptional condition for nearly two hundred years, a mute testament to their high level of construction and subsequent level of care.

Shakers began fabricating their own furnishings almost as soon as they were "gathered into community." Their basic tenets, often referred to as “the three C’s”—Communal ownership of all goods (beds, tools, clothing, etc.), regular Confession (in private), and Celibacy, along with pacifism—set them apart from the World. Living in villages physically separated from their neighbors and becoming relatively self-sufficient from others confirmed their differences. With minimal experience, it is usually quite easy to distinguish Shaker-made from Worldly-made goods.

The NBMAA is most grateful to the following lenders for making A Tale of Two Enfields possible: Charles Cybulski, Dr. Don G. Wartella, Enfield Shaker Museum, Enfield, NH, and the Miller Collection.

- M. STEPHEN MILLER, GUEST CURATOR
Ansel Adams, Half Dome, Thunder Cloud, ca. 1956, Silver gelatin print, Collection of Andrea Barton, L.2016.8.16TL

Ansel Adams and the Legacy of the American Landscape: Photographs from the NBMAA considers Adams’ immeasurable contributions to photography, art, and environmental advocacy over the past century. The exhibition places iconic images by Adams in dialogue with works by photographers who practiced during and after his life, to provide deeper perspectives on themes central to his practice, demonstrate the power of his legacy, and inspire consideration about the state of the American landscape in the 21st century.

Featured in the exhibition is Adams’ Portfolio III: Yosemite Valley, comprising 16 silver gelatin prints depicting the beauty of Yosemite National Park in California. Born in San Francisco, Adams visited Yosemite National Park in 1916 with his family and was given his first camera. Photography and Yosemite would remain subjects of fascination for the remainder of Adams’ life. In 1960, Portfolio III was published by the Sierra Club, a renowned conservation organization of which Adams was a dedicated member for 32 years. Dating from 1927 to 1960, the portfolio images capture nature in its most grand and minute details. These and other works by Adams had profound success in awakening many Americans to the beauty of the nation’s natural regions and the importance of preserving them.

Among the 20th- and 21st-century artists featured in conversation with Adams are pioneering photographers Dorothea Lange and Marilyn Bridges, who offered new social, cultural, and visual perspectives on the American landscape, as well as contemporary photographers Michael A. Smith, Stephen Petegorsky, and Marion Belanger, who capture views of the landscape in both its pristine and cultivated spaces. Collectively, these works consider the role photography has played, and continues to play, in our changing perceptions of photography and the American landscape.

Among the most revered photographers of the 20th century, Ansel Adams is celebrated for his majestic black-and-white images of the American West. For nearly 60 years, Adams explored and recorded the grandeur of nature, initiating a lyrical way of viewing the world in photographs that convey beauty, awe, and emotional drama. Advocating “pure” photography favoring sharp focus, Adams placed great value on technical mastery and elevated photography as an art form throughout the 20th century.

My brother Jeff, sister Nancy, and I (Kevin) are co-trustees of the JP Bruemmer Charitable Lead Trust (CLT). This 15-year term CLT was created by the estate of our father, Jay Bruemmer, upon his death at the age of 86 in 2009.

My father was born and raised in New Britain and worked in town his entire life. He and his wife, Lorraine, focused most of their philanthropic efforts on the Museum as longtime Members, donors, and participants. He and then Director Douglas Hyland were great friends and often lunched together in town talking over Museum business.

In planning his estate, it was our father’s desire to extend his support of the NBMAA by providing a fixed amount of money annually from the income of the CLT for a period of 15 years. For our CLT, one-third of the distributions goes to the NBMAA, and the remaining goes to other non-profits chosen by the three of us.

Unlike the more common Charitable Remainder Trust (CRT) in which the donor receives an income stream during their lifetime with the remainder going to the benefitting organization on their death, with a CLT, the “lead” interests (NBMAA among others) get a distribution every year for 15 years, with the “remainder” going to all of us.

In both cases there are tax advantages for the donor. Notably, a CLT provides the charity with a dependable income stream for a specified term rather than having to wait for an unknown period of time in the case of a CRT.

In the beginning, managing such a trust was unfamiliar territory for us. CLTs only comprise about five percent of all charitable trusts and the legal expertise on CLTs is very hard to find. Eventually, we identified Heather Rhoades of Cummings & Lockwood (in West Hartford) who has been a great resource, ultimately guiding us in what has been a successful trusteeship and execution of our father’s wishes.

We schooled ourselves on how to be responsible trustees, investors, and philanthropists. We devised our own bylaws to make sure that we avoided explicit or implicit self-dealing, not only by ourselves but all of our immediate families. Back in 2011 when our CLT was finally funded from the estate, we made a presentation to Douglas Hyland and his senior staff to explain how this rare split interest trust works and how the Museum would receive support. We became quite skilled at vetting charities by examining their tax returns (990s) and their financials. We learned a lot, including how to work well with each other.

Today, as we near the close of the term of our CLT, we have also learned how important, significant, and valuable the NBMAA is to a wide swath of Central Connecticut and beyond, just as our father had seen. Over the past several years, we have attended and enjoyed a number of exhibitions and programs at the Museum. And we have been avid ambassadors, urging our friends to stop by themselves, taking pride in their comments of how impressed they were with what they saw and experienced, knowing the trust was behind it.

Although we all live out of state now, we had the good fortune this summer to visit the Museum and meet the Museum’s new Director & CEO, Brett Abbott. Brett was gracious, knowledgeable, and responsive, and we left knowing the Museum is in good hands and that the JP Bruemmer CLT has and is helping position the Museum for a continued bright future.

Inspired by the philanthropy of the Bruemmer family?

When I moved to New Britain from Washington D.C. ten years ago, I never imagined that I would develop such strong bonds and friendships around the city, including with the New Britain Museum of American Art. To me, the NBMAA is a place you can only dream of until you’re a part of it. I have roots in the fine arts as a former arts student at Georgetown University. I was immediately drawn to the Museum for that reason. Beyond its beautiful facade and location in the park, the Museum holds an outstanding collection of American art and brings top-notch exhibitions to my neighborhood. The Museum allows me to feed my creative soul. Since joining the Community Advisory Committee three years ago, when it was founded, I am a part of the Museum in more ways than I could have dreamed. I have gotten to help in the planning of Community Days, hosted virtual open mics, and moderated a talk for the presentation of 30 Americans.

Without a doubt, my favorite memory at the Museum, by far, is Juneteenth. Three years ago, I jumped onto something that had already been moving for 20 years thanks to Paulette Fox and the African American Advisory Committee. Now, I’m onboard and have been co-planning and MCing since 2021. I just hope I can carry on the tradition as impressively as others in this community did before me.

I don’t think my experience working with the Museum staff is just a one-off. It demonstrates the staff’s collaborative nature with its patrons and community. The Museum listens. I’ve been on committees at other organizations, but the NBMAA holds the best meetings. The Museum is open—open to ideas, open to change. It’s not at every place that that happens. I’ve always been comfortable sharing my ideas around the table, and I hold the Museum’s input in high regard as well. I mention my relationship with the NBMAA more than you think because I’m so proud to be a part of the Museum’s ideas and future. The Museum is evolutionary; it is growing. It is part of the growth of New Britain. As a resident of New Britain’s downtown district, I can see all the developments emerging from my window, and I’m proud to say that the Museum is here in New Britain and is certainly an asset to the city’s downtown.
